

Jay Yang

PRO

A/T : China's rise will increase human rights abuse

- 1) In the established argument there is no clear connection between the rise of China and the increase of human rights abuse.
- 2) There is no correlation between the rise of human rights abuse in China (If it does occur) with the economic downfall of the United States
- 3) The rise of China will most likely result in the continuation of the already present violation of human rights instead of greater exploitation
- 4) United States actually counteracts and helps violation prevention in China. United States has economic pressure on the China and keeps them from violating the human rights. U.S. counteracts violations by improving them in countries like China. United States gives foreign aid to poverty and the people getting violated from the exploitation.

<http://www.china-embassy.org/eng/xw/t675646.htm>

- 5) The rights given to the people have actually increased according to "undo". So while the violations of human rights may still be present they are decreasing. Decreasing is the key point because it means that the government is attempting to resolve the problem.